Expert Calls for Stronger Data Protection Measures

BY GLENN LUMITI

In the wake of the ever-evolving digital landscape, concerns about data protection have become paramount. With the recent celebration of World Data Protection Day on January 28th, countries around the globe took stock of their efforts in safeguarding sensitive information. Kenya, in particular, marked the occasion on January 26th, and the Kenyan School of Government Mombasa Campus played a role by hosting the regional celebration. Dignitaries from across the region attended the event, shedding light on the importance of robust data protection measures.

Amidst the festivities and discussions, we had the privilege of conducting a brief yet insightful interview with Mr. Gregory Mwaniki, Assistant Account General from the National Treasury. Currently attending the Conference Facilities for Financial Management for Project Accountants Training at Mombasa Campus, Mwaniki shared his perspectives on the pressing issue of data protection.

One of the key questions posed to Mwaniki was whether institutions, including government bodies, are doing enough to protect the data of their staff and clients. In response, he acknowledged that while many institutions have made efforts, they are not operating at 100% efficiency.

"Most of them have tried and are operating at 60% efficiency. While commendable efforts have been made by many institutions, we must acknowledge the gaps that persist. Achieving the optimal level of data protection necessitates ongoing training and constant awareness programs for all stakeholders," Mr. Mwaniki stated.

When queried about the best approach organizations should adopt to protect data, he was clear, emphasizing the necessity of having a robust data management structure that strictly permits authorized individuals to access data.

This underscores the importance of implementing stringent access controls and authentication mechanisms to safeguard sensitive information from unauthorized access.

Given his background in financial management and the current training at KSG, Mr. Mwaniki gave his recommendations for the institution in terms of data protection; the need for a dedicated data protection unit available for all courses as he also suggested allocating more time to this critical aspect of training.

"I would recommend a data protection unit for all courses and more time to be given to this session that will be integrated in all programs," Mwaniki proposed. This highlights the recognition that data protection is not a standalone concern but should be seamlessly assimilated into various courses to ensure a holistic understanding and implementation across disciplines.

Drawing on his experiences from a trip to the World Bank regional offices with his course mates, Mr. Mwaniki delved deeper on a Data Management Structure as the foundational pillar of data protection. This structure should be a living document, regularly reviewed and updated to ensure that only authorized personnel have access to sensitive information. He cited the World Bank's approach as an example, highlighting their robust authentication and verification protocols that make all transactions secure, ultimately leading to efficient data protection.

Data protection transcends the boundaries of individual institutions. Collaborative efforts across government, private sector, and civil society are essential. However, more needs to be done. Initiatives like mandatory data protection training for public officials and the implementation of comprehensive data governance frameworks across all sectors can significantly improve data security practices.

Technological advancements, while offering undeniable benefits, create new data protection challenges. The ever-evolving cyber threat landscape demands constant vigilance and adaptation. Continuous investment in infrastructure, training, and regulatory frameworks is crucial to stay ahead of emerging threats.

While Kenya has made strides in data protection legislation, with the Data Protection Act of 2019 being a notable step forward, there is room for improvement. Strengthening enforcement mechanisms, encouraging greater public understanding of data rights, and addressing emerging challenges like artificial intelligence impact on data privacy are crucial areas for further development.

Beyond policy and legislation, practical steps are important. Individuals can safeguard their data by using strong passwords, being cautious about sharing personal information online, and understanding their privacy rights. Organizations can implement data encryption, conduct regular security audits, and adopt a culture of data privacy within their workforce.

Visit Underscores Significance of Community Service

BY VENUS BARTENA

Raising a child was the business of the community where all were mindful of the needs and safety of the children without discrimination. However, today, there is a worrying trend of individuals becoming isolated and not eager to support others because of the breakdown of brotherhood and the emergence of economic pressures.

As such, actors like Governments, international organizations, religious organizations, social groups, professionals, and more are joining hands for the holistic nurturing of vulnerable children whose hopes and dreams are on the verge of escape.

In a display of empathy and social responsibility, the Senior Management Course Cohort 183/2024 at Baringo Campus on Thursday, February 1, 2024, embarked on a visit to Sunrise Children's Home. Corporate Social Responsibility has been integrated in all the programs offered at the School, in an effort to respond to the needs of the community such as challenges of poverty, drug abuse, illiteracy, environmental degradation and climate change, and limited educational standards which have a dent on development.

Located on outskirts of Kabarnet Town, Sunrise Children's Home is a haven for children who have been abused, orphaned, and abandoned. It is the refuge for the incarcerated or those with active custodial cases within the locality.

KSG Course Coordinator Ms. Eddah Cheruiyot and class president Mr. Erick Odei Obama, led the team comprising seasoned professionals and leaders from various sectors, to connect with the younger generation.

Upon arrival, they were received by the founder of the Home, Ms. Mary Sang, her staff and the children.

One of the notable aspects of the call was the interest shown by the Class in understanding the challenges faced at the Home with a view for involvement in future endeavours of uplifting the vulnerable.

Class president, Mr. Obama said, "This experience goes beyond the confines of our academic pursuits. It has illuminated the value of responsiveness and social consciousness in our leadership roles. We are not just administrators; we are stewards of positive change."

Contributions in kind and of financial nature by the visitors are a small representation of improving the quality of life of the vulnerable in society that in the long run should be meaningful and sustainable.

KSG continues actualizing mental wellness

BY CHRISTINE RWAMBA

The discourse on mental health continues to gain momentum as society recognizes the profound impact it has on individuals and communities. The World Health Organization (WHO) estimates that 264 million people suffer from depression globally and depression is presently the leading cause of suicide which accounts for approximately eight hundred thousand (800,000) deaths worldwide. As such, WHO recognizes depression as a threat to health and the leading cause of death and also disability. It is noted that between 76% and 85% of people in low- and middle-income countries receive no treatment for their mental disorders; and this is attributed to insufficient trained health-care providers, high levels of social stigma associated with mental disorders and inaccurate assessment.

Institutions should play a pivotal role in fostering a supportive environment in recognizing and responding to the critical importance of mental health in overall well-being. The Kenya School of Government, as a leading institution for training public servants, has a unique opportunity to integrate mental health promotion into its programs. This proactive approach not only benefits the mental well-being of its staff, but also contributes to the creation of a healthier and more resilient public service.

On Monday, January 29, 2024, the Public Service Commission (PSC) enrolled staff from The Human Resource Management and Development Officers and Line Managers from Ministries, Departments, Agencies and Counties, to the Essential Counselling Skills Program at the Kenya School of Government, Embu Campus.

Speaking on behalf of the Principal Secretary during the official opening of the program, the Secretary Administration, State Department for Public Service, Mr. Munyembo Mwachala, said that the current mental health trends in the country have greatly affected productivity of the public servants in the country. "The current mental health trends in the country pose a great concern with the rise of suicidal cases. The Public Service being no exception is facing rising incidences of psychological disorders, depression and Substance Use Disorder (SUD), which in turn impacts negatively on work productivity," he said, adding that the situation has been compounded by the post effect of COVID-19 pandemic, which complicates the mental health of the public servants.

By actively promoting mental health within the School, the institution plays a transformative role in shaping a mentally resilient and empowered public service. These initiatives not only directly benefit the individuals involved, but contribute to a positive and supportive organizational culture. As mental health is recognized globally, the integration of these measures ensures that the institution remains at the forefront of promoting the wellbeing of its staff and students.

In his address to participants, Mr. Mwachala pointed out that all is not lost for public servants, as the concern on the state of mental health in the country is well articulated in the Kenya Mental Health Action Plan of 2021 - 2025. "Towards implementing recommendations of the Action Plan, the State Department for Public Service undertook to build the capacity of public servants as mental health champions through the Essential Counselling Skills Program." He said, "In line with this, I am confident in this training; that focuses on building your competencies in key in preventing and managing mental health and wellbeing issues of public servants at the workplace."

As mental health awareness continues to evolve, the role of counselors becomes increasingly important. The Ag. Secretary, Department of Counselling and Wellness Services, Ms. Grace Wanjiku, expressed her worry on the declining number of Psychologists in the country. "We have few Psychologists and even fewer Psychiatrists in the country who can help us in matters of mental health," she said. "A comprehensive understanding of essential counseling skills is vital for professionals seeking to effectively promote mental health and well-being. This course is designed with the essential skills needed to provide empathetic, client-centered support and promote positive mental health outcomes," she added.

Embu Campus Deputy Director, Dr. Fredrick Mukabi reiterated the importance of our mental well-being, assuring participants of support from the School. "Every other day we get challenges relating to our officers struggling with mental health issues, but with every cohort that we get in this program, we are confident that the public service is a step further into solving this puzzle by releasing officers who play a key role in the prevention and management of mental health and wellbeing," he stated.

Back Home: KSG Re-opens Football Pitch

BY SHARON NGINA

Director General of the Kenya School of Government Prof. Ludeki Chweya has officially authorized the use of home football pitch for both Ogopa FC and the Ogopalets FC girls' team after almost two years of closure. The pitch that is for multi-purpose use for different games and tournaments such as football, netball, volleyball and team building activities has been under rehabilitation under the guidance of Administration Manager, Ms. Agnes Laikera, for the past two years. This has been made possible through the efforts of the Grounds Team using KSG's internal resources.

The endorsement marked a significant milestone that symbolized the commitment of the School towards supporting local sports, and provides a platform for both male and female athletes to showcase their talent. The newly commissioned pitch is also a testament to the ongoing efforts to promote inclusivity and diversity within the community.

During the event, Prof. Chweya expressed his determination to empower both men and women in sports and assured continued support to help them reach their full potential recognizing the importance of supporting the talent of female athletes just as that of their male counterparts. The pledge of support serves as a motivating force, encouraging Ogopalets FC to pursue their passion.

These efforts have seen the School embark on a significant project at KSG Matuga Campus aimed at setting up a Sports Arena that comprises a golf course, two state-of-the-art football pitches, a rugby pitch, and a modern netball court. The institution envisions these amenities as a catalyst for nurturing talent, fostering friendly competition, and creating an environment where individuals can thrive both professionally and in their talents.

Sports Roundup

In a remarkable display of skill and teamwork, Ogopalets FC secured their first triumphant win in their first game of the season against Desert Venom FC, scoring two goals from Ivy Ashihundu to eventually clinch the match and claim a valuable three points. This successful debut not only underscores the team's competitive spirit but also sets a positive tone for their future endeavors. The cohesive performance of the players on the field reflects the promising potential of the Ogopalets in the local football scene. The victory not only adds to the team's first successes but also serves as a source of pride for the School.

Their counterparts Ogopa FC have played 7 matches so far and lost 1 match, drawn 4, and won 2. Their recent win was last week during their away match where they played against Aspire Nyahururu FC and won 2-0.

This Saturday, February 3, 2024, Ogopa FC will play against Melta Kabiria FC, the first game on this newly refurbished pitch. The match will be curtain raised by Ogopa Wazee FC nicknamed Ogopa Unfit. The doubleheader promises to be an action-packed day of football and will bring together fans of all ages. The weekend serves as more than just a game; it is a celebration of the passion, resilience, and unifying power of football in the Ogopa community.
